How To Submit a Letter to the Editor at the New York Times

The New York Times has an extremely straightforward, simple process for submitting Letters to the Editor. Simply write your letter and email it to letters@nytimes.com. Make sure your letter is in the body of the email and NOT an attachment.

Requirements:

- Letters should be preferably 150 to 175 words.
- Letters should refer to an article that has appeared within the last seven days.
- Letters must include the writer's address and phone number.
- Letters should not contain attachments.
- Letters should be exclusive to the New York Times. They do not publish open letters or third-party letters.

If your letter is selected for publication, you should be notified within a week. If they decide not to publish your letter, you will receive an automated email reply.

 After you've submitted your letter, remember to log it on our website! We need your help keeping track of how many letters to the editor get sent nationwide! ***

We are aware that the New York Times has a paywall, and all articles are not accessible to those without a subscription. However, for this particular effort, it is absolutely fine for your letter to have a more general emphasis on covering the TPNW, rather than responding to the article itself. Additionally, according to the NYT website (as of April 13, 2022) nonsubscribers can read up to 10 articles for free per month.
